K.

K, the eleventh letter of the English alphabet, is borrowed from the Greeks, being the same character as the Greek kappa, answering to the Oriental kaph. It represents a close articulation, formed by pressing the root of the tongue against the upper part of the mouth, with a depression of the lower jaw and opening of the teeth. It is usually denominated a guttural, but is more properly a palatal. Before all the vowels, it has one invariable sound, corresponding with that of c before a, o, and u, as in keel, ken. In monosyllables, it is used after c, as in crack, check, deck, being necessary to exhibit a correct pronunciation in the derivatives, cracked, checked, decked, cracking; for without it, c, before the vowels e and i, would be sounded like s.

Formerly, k was added to c in certain words of Latin origin, as in musick, publick, republick. But in modern practice, k is very properly omitted, being entirely superfluous, and the more properly as it is never written in the derivatives, musical, publication, republican.

K is silent before n; as in knee, knife, knee.

As a numeral, K stands for 250; and with a stroke over it, thus, K, for 250,000.

This character was not used by the ancient Romans, and rarely in the later ages of their empire. In the place of k, they used c, as in Kalendæ, for the Greek καππα. In the Teutonic dialects, this Greek letter is sometimes represented by h. [See H.]

L.

L, the twelfth letter of the English alphabet, is usually denominated a semi-vowel, or a liquid. It represents an imperfect articulation, formed by placing the tip of the tongue against the gum that incloses the roots of the upper teeth, but the sides of the tongue not being in close contact with the roof of the mouth, the breath of course not being entirely intercepted, this articulation is attended with an imperfect sound. The shape of the letter is evidently borrowed from that of the Oriental lamed, or lamad, nearly coinciding with the Samaritan 𐤋.

L has only one sound in English, as in like, canal. At the end of monosyllables, it is often doubled, as in fall, full, tell, bell, but not after diphthongs and digraphs; foul, fool, prowl, growl, foal, &c., being written with a single l.

With some nations, l and r are commutable; as in Greek λεπτον, L. liburna, It. scorta, an escort, Sp. and Port. escolta. Indeed, l and r are letters of the same organ.

By some nations of Celtic origin, l at the beginning of words is aspirated and doubled in writing, as in the W. lled, L. latus, llan, a lawn; llawr, a floor, Sp. llamar, L. clamo.

In some words, l is mute, as in half, calf, walk, talk, chalk.

In our mother tongue, the Anglo-Saxon, l is sometimes preceded by h, and aspirated, as in hlaf, loaf, hladan, to lade or load, hlot, lot, hlinian, hleonian, to lean, Gr. κλινω, L. clino. In the latter word, the Saxon h represents the Greek κ and Latin c, as it does in many other words.

In English words, the terminating syllable le is unaccented, the e is silent, and l has a forcible sound, as in able, eagle, pronounced abl, eagl.

As a numeral, L. denotes 50, and with a dash, L, 50,000. As an abbreviation, in accounts, L. stands for pound, [L. libra, pound.] It is also used for book, or division of a work, [L. liber.] In Latin, it stands for Lucius; and L. L. S. for a sesterce, or two libræ and a half. Encyc.

1. Freedom from restraint, in a general sense, and applicable to the body, or to the will or mind. The body is at liberty when not confined; the will or mind is at liberty when not checked or controlled. A man enjoys liberty when no physical force operates to restrain his actions or volitions.

2. Natural liberty consists in the power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, except from the laws of nature. It is a state of exemption from the control of others, and from positive laws, and the institutions of social life. This liberty is abridged by the establishment of government.

3 Civil liberty is the liberty of men in a state of society, or natural liberty, so far only abridged and restrained, as is necessary and expedient for the safety and interest of the society, state, or nation. A restraint of natural liberty, not necessary or expedient for the public, is tyranny or oppression. Civil liberty is an exemption from the arbitrary will of others, which exemption is secured by established laws, which restrain every man from injuring or controlling another. Hence the restraints of law are essential to civil liberty.

The liberty of one depends not so much on the removal of all restraint from him, as on the due restraint upon the liberty of others. Ames.

In this sentence, the latter word liberty denotes natural liberty.

4. Political liberty is sometimes used as synonymous with civil liberty. 1. The agent which produces vision. The phenomenon of light may be explained, either on the supposition that light is a material fluid of extreme subtilty, emanating in particles from a luminous body, or that it is produced by the undulations of an independent medium, set in motion by the luminous body. The former supposition is called the theory of emanations, the latter, the theory of undulations. White light is a compound of seven different colors, viz., red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. The sun is the principal source of light in the solar system, but light is also emitted from bodies ignited, or in combustion, and is reflected from enlightened bodies, as the moon. When the logarithms form a series in arithmetical progression, the corresponding natural numbers form a series in geometrical progression. Thus,

Logarithms,	0	1	2	3	4	5
Natural numbers,	1	10	100	1000	10000	100000

The addition and subtraction of logarithms answer to the multiplication and division of their natural numbers In like manner, involution is performed by multiplying the logarithm of any number by the number denoting the required power, and evolution, by dividing the logarithm by the number denoting the required root.

Logarithms are the invention of Baron Napier, lord of Marchiston, in Scotland, but the kind now in use were invented by Henry Briggs, professor of geometry in Gresham College, at Oxford. They are extremely useful in abridging the labor of trigonometrical calculations

LOOK, v. t. [Sax. locian, G. lugen, Sans. lok, lokita It is perhaps allied to W. llygu, to appear, to shine (See LIGHT.) The primary sense is to stretch, to extend, to shoot, hence, to direct the eye. We observe its primary sense is nearly the same as that of seek. Hence, to look for is to seek.]
1. To direct the eye toward an object, with the intention of seeing it
When the object is within sight, look is usually followed by on or at. We look on or at a picture, we look on or at the moon, we can not look on or at the unclouded sun with safe pain
At, after look, is not used in our version of the Scriptures. In common usage, at or on is now used indifferently in many cases, and yet in other cases usage has established a preference. In general, on is used in the more solemn forms of expression. Moses was afraid to look at God. The Lord looks on you and judge. In these and similar phrases, the use of at would be condemned, as expressing too little solemnity.
In some cases, at seems to be more properly used before very distant objects, but the case seem hardly to be defined
The particular direction of the eye is expressed by various modifying words, as, to look down, to look up, to look back, to look forward, to look from or to, to look round, to look out, to look under. When the object is not in sight, look is followed by after, or for. Hence, to look after, or look for, is equivalent to seek, to search or to expect.

In short, we love whatever gives us pleasure and delight, whether animal or intellectual, and if our hearts are right, we love God above all things, as the sum of all excellence, and all the attributes which can communicate happiness to intelligent beings. In other words, the Christian loves God with the love of complacency in his attributes, the love of benevolence toward the interests of his kingdom, and the love of gratitude for favors received.

LOVE, v. i. To delight; to take pleasure. Shakst.

LOVE, (luv,) n. An affection of the mind excited by beauty and worth of any kind, or by the qualities of an object which communicate pleasure, sensual or intellectual. It is opposed to HATRED. Love between the sexes is a compound affection, consisting of esteem, benevolence, and animal desire. Love is excited by pleasing qualities of any kind, as by kindness, benevolence, charity, and by the qualities which render social intercourse agreeable. In the latter case, love is ardent friendship, or a strong attachment springing from good will and esteem, and the pleasure derived from the company, civilities, and kindnesses of others.

Between certain natural relatives, love seems to be in some cases instinctive. Such is the love of a mother for her child, which manifests itself toward an infant, before any particular qualities in the child are unfolded. This affection is apparently as strong in irrational animals as in human beings.

We speak of the love of amusement, the love of books, the love of money, and the love of whatever contributes to our pleasure or supposed profit.

The love of God is the first duty of man, and this springs from just views of his attributes or excellences of character, which afford the highest delight to the sanctified heart. Esteem and reverence constitute ingredients in this affection, and a fear of offending him is its inseparable effect.

In the ancient churches, the public services at which the catechumens were permitted to be present, were called missa catechumenorum, because at the close of them proclamation was made thus: Ite, missa est, &c. ecclesia. Then followed the communion service, which was called missa fidelium; and which, under the name of missa, or the mass, still constitutes the principal part of public worship in the Roman Catholic churches. Murdock.

1. The murder of an individual, or the slaughter of number of human beings, with circumstances of cruelty, the indiscriminate killing of human beings, without authority or necessity, and without forms, civil or military It differs from assassination, which is a private killing. It differs from carnage, which is rather the effect of slaughter than slaughter itself, and is applied to the authorized destruction of men in battle, or other great destruction of lives by violence. Mactacre is sometimes called butchery, from its resemblance to the killing of cattle. If a soldier kills a man in battle in his own defence, it is a lawful act, it is killing, and it is slaughter, but it is not a massacre Whereas, if a soldier kills an enemy after he has surrendered, it is massacre, a killing without necessity, often without authority, contrary to the usages of nations, and of course with cruelty. The practice of killing prisoners, even when authorized by the commander, is properly massacre, as the authority given proceeds from cruelty. We have all heard of the massacre of the Protestants in France, in the reign of Charles IX., and frequent instances of barbarous massacre occur in the war between the Turks and Greeks.

In this state it is called massicot Massicot, slowly heated by a moderate fire, takes a beautiful red color, becomes a salt composed of two equivalents of the protoxyd of lead, and one equivalent of the deutoxyd, and obtains the name of minium Murcott

Many of the metals are also malleable or extensible by the hammer, and some of them extremely ductile. Metals are mostly fossil, sometimes found native or pure, but more generally combined with other matter. Some metals are more malleable than others; and this circumstance gave rise to the distinction of metals and semi-metals—a distinction little regarded at the present day. Recent discoveries have enlarged the list of the metals. Twelve are malleable, viz., platinum, gold, silver, mercury, lead, copper, tin, iron, zinc, palladium, nickel, and cadmium. The following sixteen are not sufficiently tenacious to bear extension by beating; viz., arsenic, antimony, bismuth, cobalt, manganese, tellurium, titanium, columbium, molybden, tungsten, chrome, osmium, iridium, rhodium, uranium, and cerium.

مرر marra, to pass, to walk. If the original sense of the L. mos, moris, was settled custom, the word may be from the root of moror, to stop, delay; Eng. demur.]

1. Relating to the practice, manners, or conduct of men, as social beings, in relation to each other, and with reference to right and wrong. The word moral is applicable to actions that are good or evil, virtuous or vicious, and has reference to the law of God as the standard by which their character is to be determined. The word, however, may be applied to actions which affect only, or primarily and principally, a person's own happiness.

Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker.
Mankind is broken loose from moral bands. Dryden.

2. Subject to the moral law, and capable of moral actions; bound to perform social duties; as, a moral agent or being.

moral maxims; moral approbation; moral doubts; moral justice; moral virtues; moral obligations, &c. Or moral denotes something which respects the intellectual powers of man, as distinct from his physical powers. 2. The practice of the moral duties; virtue. We often admire the politeness of men whose morality we question.

3 The quality of an action which renders it good; the conformity of an act to the divine law, or to the principles of rectitude. This conformity implies that the act must be performed by a free agent, and from a motive of obedience to the divine will. This is the strict theological and scriptural sense of morality. But we often apply the word to actions which accord with justice and human laws, without reference to the motives from which they proceed.

MORT'GAGE, (mor'gaje,) n. [Fr mort, dead, and gage, pledge.]

1. Literally, a dead pledge, the grant of an estate in fee as security for the payment of money, and on the condition that if the money shall be paid according to the contract, the grant shall be void, and the mortgagee shall reconvey the estate to the mortgagor Formerly the condition was, that if the mortgagor should repay the money at the day specified, he might then re-enter on the estate granted in pledge, but the modern practice is for the mortgagee, on receiving payment, to reconvey the land to the mortgagor. Before the time specified for payment, that is, between the time of contract and the time limited for payment, the estate is conditional, and the mortgagee is called tenant in mortgage, but on failure of payment at the time limited, the estate becomes absolute in the mortgagee. But in this case, courts of equity interpose, and if the estate is of more value than the debt, they will, on application, grant a reasonable time for the mortgagor to redeem the estate. This is called the equity of redemption. Blackstone.

Fr. mere, mother, contracted from the Latin.
W. madrez, matter, purulent discharge.

We observe that in some other languages, as well as in English, the same word signifies a female parent, and the thick slime formed in vinegar; and in all the languages of Europe here cited, the orthography is nearly the same as that of mud and matter. The question then occurs, whether the name of a female parent originated in a word expressing matter, mold, either the soil of the earth, as the producer, or the like substance, when shaped and fitted as a mold for castings; or whether the name is connected with the opinion that the earth is the mother of all productions; whence the word mother-earth. We are informed by a fragment of Sanchoniathon, that the ancient Phenicians considered mud, μυρ, to be the substance from which all things were formed. (See Mud.) The word matter is evidently from the

Ar. مدى madda, to secrete, eject, or discharge a purulent substance, and I think can not have any direct connection with mud. But in the Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese, the same word madre signifies mother, and a mold for castings, and the northern languages, particularly the German and Danish, seem to establish the fact that the proper sense of mother is matrix. Hence mother of pearl, the matrix of pearl. If this word had its origin in the name of the earth used for the forms of castings, it would not be a singular fact, for our word mold, in this sense, I suppose to be so named from mold, fine earth. The question remains sub judice.]

1. The act of mutilating, deprivation of a limb or of an essential part.

2. Mutilation is a term of very general import, applied to bodies, to statues, to buildings, and to writings; but appropriately, it denotes the retrenchment of a human limb or member, and particularly of the male organs of generation.

Sw. mytteri, mutiny; Arm. muza, to mew or molt. We see that these words, mutiny and mew, are from the same root as L. muto, to change, W. mudaw, which is radically the same word as L. moto, to move. Mutiny is formed from the French mutin, a derivative word, and mew from the root or verb. So motin, in Spanish, is a derivative, while muda, change, and Port. mudar, to change feathers, are directly from the verb; Eth. ሰደመ sadama, to turn, Ar. ﻫﺪﻡ hadama, to move or drive, or ﻣﺎﺕ mata, to drive. Class Md, No. 14, 10.]

An insurrection of soldiers or seamen against the authority of their commanders, open resistance of officers, or opposition to their authority. A mutiny is properly the act of numbers, but by statutes and orders for governing the army and navy in different countries, the acts which constitute mutiny are multiplied and defined, and acts of individuals, amounting to a resistance of the authority or lawful commands of officers, are declared to be mutiny. Any attempt to excite opposition to lawful authority, or any act of contempt toward officers, or disobedience of commands, is by the British Mutiny Act declared to be mutiny. Any concealment of mutinous acts, or neglect to attempt a suppression of them, is declared also to be mutiny.

Note. — In good authors who lived a century ago, mutiny and mutinous were applied to insurrection and sedition in civil society. But I believe these words are now applied exclusively to soldiers and seamen.

MU'TI-NY, v. i. To rise against lawful authority in military and naval service, to excite, or attempt to excite, opposition to the lawful commands of military and naval officers, to commit some act which tends to bring the authority of officers into contempt, or in any way to promote insubordination.

And look through nature up to nature's God Pope.

2. By a metonymy of the effect for the cause, nature is used for the agent, creator, author, producer, of things, or for the powers that produce them. By the expression, "trees and fossils are produced by nature," we mean, they are formed or produced by certain inherent powers in matter, or we mean that they are produced by God, the Creator, the Author of whatever is made or produced. The opinion that things are produced by inherent powers of matter, independent of a supreme, intelligent Author, is atheism. But generally, men mean by nature, thus used, the Author of created things, or the operation of his power.

3. The essence, essential qualities, or attributes, of a thing, which constitute it what it is; as, the nature of the soil; the nature of blood; the nature of a fluid; the nature of plants, or of a metal; the nature of a circle or an angle. When we speak of the nature of man, we understand the peculiar constitution of his body or mind, or the qualities of the species which distinguish him from other animals. When we speak of the nature of a man, or an individual of the race, we mean his particular qualities or constitution; either the peculiar temperament of his body, or the affections of his mind, his natural appetites, passions, disposition, or temper. So of irrational animals.

4. The established or regular course of things; as when we say, an event is not according to nature, or it is out of the order of nature. Boyle.

So in L. neuter, ne and uter.]
Not either; not the one or the other.
1. It refers to individual things or persons; as, which road shall I take. Neither, take neither road. The upright judge inclines to neither party.
It is used as a substitute, as, the upright judge inclines to neither of the parties.

He neither loves,
Nor either cares for him Shak.

2. It refers to a sentence; as, "Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it;" that is, ye shall not eat, nor either or other shall ye touch it, ye shall not eat, nor shall ye do the other thing here mentioned, that is, touch it. Gen. iii.
"Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king;" that is, fight not, either with small or great. 1 Kings xxii.
Neither, in the first part of a negative sentence, is followed by nor in the subsequent part. It is neither the one nor the other. But or would be most proper, for the negative in neither applies to both parts of the sentence.
It is often used in the first member of a negative sentence instead of nor, as in the passage above cited. "Ye shall not eat it, neither shall ye touch it." Here neither is improperly used for nor, for not in the first clause refers only to that clause, and the second negative refers only to the second clause. "Ye shall not eat it, nor shall ye touch it."
In the sentences above, neither is considered to be a conjunction or connecting word, though in fact it is a pronoun or representative of a clause of a sentense.
3. Neither primarily refers to two; not either of two. But by usage it is applicable to any number, referring to individuals separately considered. Five or ten persons being charged with a misdemeanor or riot, each may say, neither of us was present.
4. Neither sometimes closes a sentence in a peculiar manner, thus: "Men come not to the knowledge of ideas thought to be innate, till they come to the use of reason; nor then neither." Locke.
That is, not either when they come to the use of reason, or before.
Formerly, in English, as in Greek and French, two negatives were used for one negation. But in such phrases as that above, good speakers now use nother i "nor then either."

This is a genuine English use of never, found in our Saxon authors, and it ought to be retained. "Ask me so much dower as never was done;" that is, dower to any extent. The practice of using ever in such phrases is corrupt. It not only destroys the force but the propriety of the phrase.

Burke. Camden. Washington. Goldsmith. Hooke.

3. In no degree, not.

Whoever has a friend to guide him, may safely his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South.

NO TION, n. [Fr., from L. notio, from notus, known, nosco, to know.]

1. Conception; mental apprehension of whatever may be known or imagined. We may have a just notion of power, or false notions respecting spirit.

Notion and idea are primarily different, idea being the conception of something visible, as the idea of a square or a triangle, and notion the conception of things invisible or intellectual, as the notion we have of spirits. But from negligence in the use of idea, the two words are constantly confounded.
